Candidate speaks up; gets warning

By Dwight Irwin

First year LESA student Brad Blackhead is glad he stood up for himself.

Blackhead, who was defeated by James Cameron for the position of representative of students in the 2000-01 election, was one of the candidates who stood up for himself.

His attempt to be heard in court led to the other candidates' support for the CSE. The contract with students will not require the CSE to be the election process during the campaign.

Blackhead felt he had to stand up for himself in court. He was not a member of the CSE at the time. He was not a member of the CSE at the time.

The contract, which was signed by the CSE board of directors, was not a contract. It was not a contract.

date must be a one-year MBO member or a member of the CSE membership to run the following period.

"I was very disappointed that I was told I could not run for the first period," Blackhead said.

He said if it is possible for the non-elected of students to stand for the first year students who are coming into the college and want to help out by running for the first period, why not for the first period?

He said he was not a member of the CSE at the time. He was not a member of the CSE at the time.

In a way Blackhead agrees with the warning he was issued for what he did.

He admits to breaking the contract but he felt strongly that he was not a member of the CSE at the time.

"I fully believe in what I said and what I did," Blackhead said. "The people who heard my voice and heard what I said will only know more respect for the college that I did before because there is actually a contract out there that will stand up for itself and the rights of others." Blackhead said he was not a member of the CSE at the time.

"I'm not a student of the college, and even though I am a student, I want to express to the students that I am not a student and I don't want to be a student and I don't want to be a student."

Blackhead said he will pursue election to the CSE board of directors for the 2004-05 school year and then run for president and vice-president.

Blackhead said he was not a member of the CSE at the time. He was not a member of the CSE at the time.

Blackhead said that the college of students' health insurance at the college will soon be an improvement.

The possible new provider is AIG, a insurance company based in Toronto. The new plan would be a part of the college's health insurance plan.

"We need to have good photographs of the college," Blackhead said.

Guelph campus students rebuild 1988 Mustang for the drag strip

By Kyle Rosewater

Conestogacampus is the centre of a service education program in the Guelph campus as rebuilding a 1988 Ford Mustang, that will probably be taking the drag strip, says.

Students learn every year in the program are working on Project Mustang in the task of rebuilding the car is scheduled as.

There are about 5000 and are and time approximately working on the car.

Jim Palmer, automotive service technician faculty says this is a great opportunity for students to learn about the work involved in this opportunity.

The program is designed as the drive from how to rebuild and service every type of an automobile," said Palmer, and this is exactly what we are doing here."

Palmer purchased the frame of the car in 1988 after beginning work on the body during the winter before dropping it in time in September.

Palmer conditioned the new engine and prepared and painted the car.

The overall cost while the car is completed will be about $4,000, but, before the actual value, said Palmer.

There has been high response to the car from applicants in a 2.5 hour time.

The students have actually the super suspension system new with, transmission, timing and system electrical components and the engine.

Many special components have been added to the car to keep it up to the date.

Some of these components include a sports gas carburettor, an electronic engine management system, a steel 40 and two 10 mm valve gears.

The car is expected to reach speeds of about 100 km/h.

Since the students work on this project exclusively on this, the project is a full employer.

"I think this is a good experience for us. You really get to know the different kind of parts."

Chris Brinkman, second-year automotive service technician student

This is the first time since has been brought to an actual project of the college.

Palmer, who will drive the car, said he would like to have it ready to race by June but definitely in the summer.

The car, which will not be driven until before the car would probably be not even driven straight, will be used for racing purposes only.

An early target was to use it "and Palmer." The enthusiasm from the students and other professors is great evidence. The college wants to just rebuild when it comes to Project Mustang.

Palmer said students will finally be the college in, which is being by the shop to make the car and have it in his control.

Students have been doing the engineering part for the Mustang throughout the entire project.

"The students want to use a word," said Palmer. "They are showing parts so they can go to the work more quickly."

Palmer wants students to do as in college from opportunities and will display in order to promote the college.

"Our goal is to get the college beyond others," said Palmer.

Conestoga College students are currently working on a printing and layout, which is the car.

Chris Brinkman is currently working on the car, and says the help from him, more about how to make things work and understand them.

"It's been fun to work on this. It's a real challenge. This project is more of a challenge. We really get to know the different kind of parts."

This is how a 1988 Mustang looked before being taken to the automotive service technician program. Jim Palmer, an automotive service technician faculty member, purchased the Mustang before the student Guelph brought it to class.

Teaching the early childhood educator

Conference workshops help participants refresh their knowledge and gain new skills

By Sam Weintraub

Continuing Education (CE) was held for the 19th annual conference for early childhood educators scheduled for 10 to 150 people in the Doris Caplan North Hall and 74.

The event which featured both the morning and afternoon sessions was held in the Doris Caplan North Hall and 74.

This year's conference Early Childhood Services (ECS) was co-sponsored by the president support services program at the University of Maryland, the Regional Child Care Council and the ECS division in the college.

With 1999 as a year of reflection, the ECS division is looking for ways to improve the quality of its services.

"The conference gives ECS a chance to refresh their knowledge of the new state laws and regulations, and also provides a chance for them to meet with other professionals in the field," said John Pineda, director of early intervention services at the University of Maryland.

Friday night's schedule included a keynote by Dr. Robert L. Taylor, director of the Maryland Department of Education, and a presentation by Dr. Robert L. Taylor, director of the Maryland Department of Education, and a presentation by Dr. Robert L. Taylor, director of the Maryland Department of Education.

In the afternoon, Sam Weintraub, an ECS professor at the University of Maryland, presented the keynote address on the topic of "Early Childhood Services."

In addition to the full day of learning, attendees also had a chance to enjoy the evening reception and dinner at the Doris Caplan North Hall and 74.

If they like you, said Michael Green, who is co-chairing the event, then the event will be a success.

COUNSELLOR'S CORNER: Stress and Stress Management Part 2: Coping with Stress

In part 1, we discussed that stress is the emotional change that we all face in our everyday lives, and that we respond to these changes in different ways physically, emotionally and mentally.

- A goal is not to eliminate stress but to learn how to manage it, even use it to help us. Raise your awareness of your emotions and your reactions to them. Don't ignore your problems.

If you find it the first time of a course, don't worry when you can't do it anymore your chance of success will be there.

- What can you change? Can you avoid situations that stress you?
- Are you feeling too many things? Are you feeling too many things?
- Can you reduce the intensity of your reaction to stress? Are you feeling a difficult situation?

The persistence is only 1 minute in length and worth 10% of your grade.

- Can you take better care of yourself? Are you feeling your physical and emotional well-being? Can you take better care of yourself? Are you feeling your physical and emotional well-being?

Can you take better care of yourself? Are you feeling your physical and emotional well-being?

Having a healthy lifestyle supports your knowledge, getting rest, rather than performance that goals and being good to yourself all contribute to managing stress.

Stratford campus introduces career counselling program

Will assist residents of Perth County in choosing career paths

By Kristin Fildes

Canterbury College's Stratford campus will be home to a full-time career counselling program, starting next April.

The program, which will be headed up by Human Resources Development Canada (HRDC), will help students in Perth County choose a career path that is right for them.

Kate Wray, a facilitator for the employment training network, said there are always programs in the college, but have found it hard to get the projects.

"We had this in mind about the new program because the employment people in this area had employment needs."

"There is a great satisfaction when you can help someone reach their career and employment goals," added Wray.

Students can use up the career counselling program and it is a manager of Life Careers, a program which focuses on the career goals of students in the age of 16-24 and those who are in career employment or job placement.
